The Health of America's Children

Maternal and child health hasn't improved much in the past 10 years, and probably won't in the near future — until we address the problems that stem from lack of insurance and access to basic health care.

A study of Medicaid contracts sheds light on the program's transition to managed care.

BY SARA ROSENBAUM

IT WAS INEVITABLE that the shift to managed care that has swept virtually the entire private health insurance system should also overtake the nation's public insurance programs. By 1997 about 40 percent of all

The Lessons of '94

“I was the biggest mistake of the Clinton health care bill,” says Sara Rosenbaum, who sat in a hotel room with other policy experts and drafted the legislation. “It was a terrible error to have the President doing what Congress was supposed to do. .. By sending a 1,300 page bill, you're writing a detailed blueprint for the policy rather than using the congressional process to create a consensus.”
